

Worthiness

I read somewhere that worthiness isn't something we have to work towards because it is innate.

It is as matter of fact as the rising sun

It is as normal as shades of autumn coming after winter

I wish that I didn't forget how much it was a part it, how much it was a part of me Hopefully, in those forgetful times – I can find my way back to remembering that I am worthy

Not because some affirmation said so but because in every fiber of my skin, it is written that I am worthy of abundance even in my darkest hours

my being

my existence is the etching of my creators love for me and my worthiness isn't something that I have to contend, explore or find Because she, like I, is as real as the earth, moon, stars and the sky

Who am I to question if I'm worthy?

When it's one of the few things that's already been decided for me

